Description

A Luigi Filippo-style walnut cabinet from Italy, dating from the second quarter of the 19th century, characterized by a solid structure and refined details. The front features four tripartite paneled doors, skillfully crafted to create an effect of depth and movement--a feature that is also repeated on the sides. The grissinato-finished uprights are embellished with turned columns at the corners, also finished in grissinato, which lends the piece a classic elegance. The plinth-style legs, also turned, provide stability and a touch of grandeur. Inside, the use of fir ensures durability and a sturdy construction. There is a spot where the finish has been stripped on one of the front panels, which may offer an opportunity to further customize the piece. This cabinet is a prime example of the taste and style of the
