Description

A bronze group with a brown patina depicting a horseman on horseback, holding a young feline under his left arm and defending himself against an attack by a tigress. A model attributed to the Italian sculptor Tommaso Campajola (1890-1968), of whom several comparable examples are known, some signed and dated around 1928. Italy, first quarter of the 20th century, circa 1925-1930. Bronze mounted directly on a veined marble base. The lance, which was once held in the right hand, is missing.
