Description

An elegant 19th-century Aubusson tapestry, of impressive dimensions, measuring approximately 2.80 m high by 1.80 m wide, depicting a charming romantic and musical scene in a landscaped park, inspired by the refined world of 18th-century courtly festivities. The composition brings together several elegantly dressed figures in a bucolic setting. In the foreground, a young couple appears to be dancing or exchanging a few steps to the rhythm of a musical performance, while on the left, several figures are seated under the trees. Perched on a stone terrace, a musician plays a stringed instrument, presumably accompanying the strollers and dancers. The scene delicately evokes the aristocratic entertainments, strolls, and rural pleasures of the Ancien Régime. The landscape plays a major role in the composition: a monumental stone fountain, lush vegetation, tall trees, a winding path, a stream, and elegant architecture in the distance come together to form a truly theatrical scene.

The presence of a castle-style building in the background reinforces the atmosphere of an aristocratic estate. The tapestry is distinguished by its soft and warm color palette, dominated by shades of beige, cream, almond green, ochre, and sienna, punctuated by the delicate colors of the costumes. The profusion of vegetation and the meticulous rendering of the figures lend the composition great depth and a particularly decorative character. With its vertical format measuring 2.80 m, this tapestry is a remarkable piece for adorning a large wall, an entryway, a living room, a library, or a home with character.

It will lend an interior a historical, elegant, and romantic presence, while reflecting the French taste for pastoral and romantic scenes. Period:
