Description

Elegant Victorian-era English magazine rack, 19th century, made entirely of wood and resting on four turned legs fitted with casters. This piece stands out for its beautiful openwork and carved woodwork, forming elegant scrolls and volutes characteristic of Victorian decorative style. The upper section consists of four storage compartments, designed to hold magazines, newspapers, sheet music, or documents. The lower section opens via a front drawer, fitted with two turned wooden knobs, providing additional storage. The piece rests on four turned legs topped with casters, allowing the magazine rack to be moved easily. A piece that is at once decorative, original, and functional, it will easily find its place in a living room, library, office, or next to an armchair. In good overall condition. Beautiful
