Description

A beautiful Anatolian door rug, originating from the Milas region of Turkey, notable for freshness and vibrancy of its colors. Woven on a small loom and knotted with the large knots characteristic of Anatolian village weavings, it features a typical compartmentalized geometric design. The luminous hues--reds, saffron tones, pinks, blues, and ivory--create a decorative ensemble and reflect the Anatolian weavers' taste for bold and warm color harmonies. The multiple borders and stylized motifs give this piece a strong ethnic presence and undeniable authenticity. There is little doubt as to the age of this work. It can be dated to late 19th century or around 1900. Having served as a door curtain or wall hanging, it was spared from wear caused by foot traffic, which explains the good overall
