Description

Beautiful and interesting torch holders--palace wall sconces made of gilded, finely carved wood. These decorative elements were placed at the entrance to a courtyard or palace, given their size: 140 cm tall by approximately 70 cm deep. The carving is rich and elaborate, featuring a succession of plant tendrils that give rise to vine shoots and bunches of grapes. These are rare pieces, especially given their state of preservation; they are virtually intact, with the original gilding perfectly preserved, and require only a light cleaning at most. Period: Mid-17th century Region: Papal States A certificate of authenticity is included with the sale
