Description

Framed original drawing. Watercolor. 47 x 62.7 cm (view size, oval format), in a 70 x 84.8 cm frame. Signed and dated in the lower right corner: "Armand Muller [?], 1918" Title on a cardboard cartouche imitating brass at the bottom of the frame: "Ateliers d'Orléans - St-Jean-de-Braye Factory". The Ambert factories were built in Saint-Jean-de-Braye, east of Orléans, in 1917, initially under the name A.C.E.O.-C.G.E. (Ateliers de Constructions Électriques d'Orléans - Compagnie Générale d'Électricité) and then, more simply, "Ateliers d'Orléans" starting in 1918. Until that time, they primarily produced ammunition; after World War I, they shifted their focus to electromechanical production (motors, alternators, generators, etc.). A very interesting perspective view of the Ambert factories, one
