Painting depicting the Virgin and Child, oil on canvas, Italian school, second half of the 18th century. The painting depicts a classic devotional subject featuring the Virgin, dressed in a red gown and blue cloak, holding the Baby Jesus, who is reclining on a white cloth. The composition highlights the tender eye contact between the Virgin and her Son, with the Madonna raising her hand to her chest in a gesture of deep devotion and maternal affection. The work reflects the conventions of Italian figurative painting, with soft modeling of the faces and warm lighting against a dark background that highlights the beauty of the skin tones; it reveals excellent composition with remarkable sculptural rendering and a perfect stylistic and chromatic harmony between the two
