Description

Portrait of a Young Girl, oil on canvas on a stretcher, whose face, with its luminous tones, stands out against a background that is, by contrast, very dark (nocturnal). This type of painted portrait was replaced, among wealthy families, by photographs, which were considered more "modern" because they were in fashion but, above all, cheaper and quicker to produce. The frame is more recent, made of gilded patinated wood (from the 1960s). The painting has undergone previous restorations visible only on the back. The painting is in good condition overall. SHIPPING AVAILABLE, carefully reinforced packaging, sent by registered mail with signature confirmation, insurance, and online tracking via its tracking number (flat-rate shipping fee).
