Adler, Jules René Hervé moved to Paris and began exhibiting at the Salon des Artistes Français in 1910, Jules René Hervé received a silver medal in 1914 and a gold medal in 1925. Then Jules René Hervé shares his life between Paris and his native city of which he paints, with a light brush, expert in small bright flashes on greys or ochres skillfully distributed, the humble and picturesque events, the portraits of his austere society to the monotonous and hushed existence - But Jules René Hervé knows just as well to restore the lively atmosphere of Parisian life and its monuments or the dancers at the foyer of the Opera - His finely observed compositions emanate delicate feelings - Appreciated by French and foreign amateurs, Jules René Hervé devoted himself to art throughout his life - Jules René Hervé is considered "the last of the impressionists" violondingres.fr
