Description

This piece is a small writing desk or coffee table in the Louis XIII / Henry II style, dating from the late 19th century. It draws direct inspiration from Renaissance models and the French High Period of the 17th century. Details of the piece The base: This is the piece's most distinctive feature. The four legs are carved in the turned baluster style (sometimes called "rosary" or "coil" legs). They rest on square connecting blocks and are joined by a beautifully molded H-shaped crossbar, adorned in the center with a spindle-turned element. The lower panel and the drawer: The front panel conceals a single large drawer. The drawer features rich bas-relief carvings depicting foliage scrolls, volutes, and a central rosette from which hangs a wrought-iron ring or pull handle. The top: Rectangular in shape,
