Description

Large still life of flowers, oil on canvas, late 17th century, circa 1680-1700, attributed to Giuseppe Volò, a painter active in northern Italy in the circle of Mario Nuzzi (known as Mario dei Fiori) and Abraham Brueghel. A double composition with great decorative impact on a stone balustrade. On the left, a bronze Medici-style vase containing a rich bouquet of flamed tulips, roses, anemones, buttercups, and jasmine. On the right, a woven wicker basket with carnations and morning glories with trailing vines, a distinctive motif of the artist. In the background, a glimpse of a landscape at sunset featuring hills and ruins. A warm and luminous color palette on a brown ground, with soft, impasto brushwork characteristic of the Roman school. Dimensions: Canvas 123 x 98 cm - Frame: approx. 135 x 110
