Description

Important Renaissance-style oak sideboard - 19th century
A very beautiful and spectacular 19th-century oak sideboard, in the French Renaissance style. This piece stands out for its exceptionally rich carving and the quality of its decoration. The front opens with two doors featuring deeply carved panels, adorned with fantastical creatures, human figures, chimeras, mascarons, scrollwork, and foliage. The side panels are particularly remarkable, entirely carved with faces and figures in high relief. The upper crossbar also features a superb openwork design, centered on a powerful mascaroon and surrounded by sweeping foliage scrolls. The upper section, designed as a two-tiered sideboard, rests on large carved corbels. The back panels themselves are decorated with foliage-patterned panels. The entire piece is crowned by a large, dynamic pediment, richly carved and centered on a face, giving the cabinet a commanding presence. Note the profusion of heads, faces, figures, and fantastical creatures scattered throughout the piece: each section reveals a new sculptural detail. The photographs allow one to appreciate the finesse and depth of this work. A very beautiful, highly decorative 19th-century Renaissance sideboard, featuring high-quality cabinetmaking and, above all, remarkable oak carving. Period: 19th century Material: oak Height: 215 cm Width: 132 cm Depth: 57 cm A truly beautiful piece full of character, as interesting for its proportions as for the abundance and exceptional quality of its carved decoration.
