Description

Royalist powder flask made from a carved coconut with a silver mount - France, 19th century
A very beautiful and rare powder flask made from a finely carved coconut, adorned with a substantial silver mount of remarkable craftsmanship. The main face is adorned with a spectacular silver military trophy, centered on the coat of arms of France featuring three fleurs-de-lis, surmounted by the royal crown and surrounded by flags, laurel branches, and intertwined military regalia. This rich iconography clearly reflects a royalist and Bourbon inspiration. The coconut also features remarkable relief carving. The upper part is decorated with a mascarón depicting a human face, while the base is entirely carved with an elegant, radiating design of foliage and plant
