Description

A set of three modular display cabinets designed by Jean-Claude Mahey for Roche Bobois in the 1970s. The structure is made of elm burl veneer, accented by brass frames and details. The upper sections are enclosed by smoked glass doors and feature three glass shelves. Each module has built-in lighting. The center module includes three drawers in the lower section. The two side modules each feature a storage compartment enclosed by two doors. Two connecting pieces are included to ensure a seamless connection and finish between the three modules. Some signs of wear and variations in patina are visible on the veneer, brass, and certain metal elements, as shown in the photographs. Dimensions per module: H. 196.5 × W. 85 × D. 50 cm. Total width of the three modules: approximately 255
