Description

Restoration-period console table in elm burl - 19th century An elegant Restoration-period console table, dating from the first half of the 19th century, featuring a beautiful burl with particularly dynamic and warm grain patterns. Rectangular in shape, it opens at the base with a wide drawer. The understated front design particularly highlights the wood's natural hues and grain patterns. The base is characteristic of the Restoration period, consisting of two substantial front legs with strongly curved and scroll-like brackets, paired with two straight legs at the back. The piece rests on a wide, concave-cut lower plinth, lending both stability and elegance to the composition. The tabletop also features a remarkable interplay of wood grain and retains a beautiful antique patina. A decorative piece with
