Description

Light for a photo lab. Pigeon lamp. Janius red glass light-proof sleeve. Created in 1884, Pigeon brass lamps became widespread and diversified into various types, including candle lamps, wall lamps, flashlights, and lamps for photographic development, featuring red-tinted glass that first appeared in 1885. These red glass light-proof sleeves are quite rare; they allow for the development of photographs by providing a small amount of light without affecting the chemicals. Good condition. Height: 30 cm.- This item is available for immediate purchase, payable via PayPal; we also accept bank transfers or French checks.- We do not accept sales over the phone; sales will be conducted exclusively via email or through the Proantic messaging system.- We ensure our items are shipped with care,
