Description

Important bronze vase, Japan, 19th century, with dragon design in high relief. Magnificent and spectacular antique bronze vase, attributed to Japan, Meiji period, 19th century, remarkable for the richness and quality of its decoration in very high relief. The vase features an elegant ovoid shape with a widely flared neck, resting on a circular foot. Its surface is adorned with a naturalistic design of waves, clouds, and stylized motifs, dominated by an impressive, sinuous dragon in relief, whose body winds around the neck and body of the vase. The dragon, rendered with great precision, features a multitude of finely executed details: scales, claws, whiskers, mane, and body movements, giving the piece remarkable depth and a truly sculptural character. The work demonstrates exceptionally meticulous work in bronze, with reliefs that protrude very sharply from the surface and numerous areas of re-chiseling. The beautiful antique dark brown patina, with golden and greenish hues, particularly highlights the different levels of the decoration. The piece as a whole has a remarkable presence and is a fine example of late 19th-century Japanese bronze, in the tradition of high-quality Japanese productions intended primarily for the Western market.
