Description

Before us is a 19th-century English coastal landscape, painted in oil on canvas and imbued with the poetry of a dawning day. The painter masterfully conveys the atmosphere of early morning and the awakening of nature, when the sky is enveloped in a soft pre-dawn haze, and the calm water surface with distorted reflections of boats, sails, and figures heightens the illusion of presence. The skilfully constructed nuances of light, with clouds illuminated by the sun's rays and the mirror-like surface of the sea bay, fill the composition with aesthetics and lyricism. In the foreground are depicted fishing boats departing from the shore for the catch, and figures of sailors engaged in preparing the vessels, which lends dynamism to the scene. In the distance, at the fading horizon, the outlines of the famous
