Description

An impressive wrought-iron console table featuring a heavy brown patina and a marble top densely speckled with white shell inclusions--specifically a crinoidal or lumachelle marble. The base boasts striking ornamentation, including large opposing scrolls, crozier-like coils, inward-facing central scrolls, and a small leafy finial on the lower stretcher, all resting on four ball feet; it displays exceptional forging quality and period welds. The substantial marble top features a molded ogee edge and a shaped "arbalète" (crossbow) profile with beak-style corners. This distinctive, chic, and timeless marble was frequently used by Gilbert Poillerat. The piece is highly stylish, blending Louis XV Rococo classicism in the shape of the top with an Art Deco spirit in the graphic design of the
