Description

An elegant set of Chinese decorative panels from the first half of the 1900s, featuring a rich red and black lacquered background and refined, Eastern-inspired decorations. The surfaces are embellished with figurative and landscape compositions, featuring elegant female figures in traditional dress, set within natural scenes featuring mountains, dwellings, vegetation, and floral elements. The decorations are executed with great attention to detail and enriched by the use of hard and semiprecious stones, which lend the scenes exquisite textural and chromatic effects. Each panel is framed by a finely decorated dark frame, embellished with ornamental motifs and topped by a central decorative metal element. The vertical composition and arrangement of the scenes give the ensemble a strong decorative and theatrical character. The lacquer red, traditionally associated with Chinese decorative art, creates an elegant contrast with the dark tones of the frames and with the colors of the stones and figures. A refined set of 20th-century Chinese panels, ideal for classic and eclectic interiors, but also particularly striking when incorporated into modern and contemporary settings, where it can become a prominent decorative element.
