Description

An important Indian printed fabric featuring a design of vases filled with flowers, produced on the Coromandel Coast in the second half of the 18th century, around 1760. This beautiful fabric consists of several joined panels, each approximately 59 cm wide, a characteristic of Indian textiles produced for European markets in the 18th century. The design consists of a succession of large floral bouquets spilling from Oriental-inspired vases, alternating with narrower bands adorned with foliage and stylized flowers. This particularly well-balanced vertical composition lends the piece remarkable decorative elegance. The color palette harmoniously combines madder reds, indigo blues, and brown-black tones against a natural cream background. The quality of the design, the finesse of the printing, and the richness of the decoration attest to the craftsmanship of the Indian workshops that supplied the French, Dutch, English, and Portuguese markets throughout the 18th century. The colors have retained a beautiful freshness, enhancing the decorative impact of this large tapestry, which remains particularly captivating today. Dimensions: Height: 209 cm Width: 176 cm Width of panels: 59 cm In good overall condition with some slight wear and irregularities consistent with the age and use of this antique fabric. A high-quality Indian fabric, representative of 18th-century Coromandel Coast productions, equally suitable for a collection of antique textiles as for a refined decorative display.
