Description

Art Deco panther sculpture mounted on marble in the style of early 20th-century Cartier. A true gem of decorative art from the Art Deco period (1910-1939) this sculpture depicts a roaring panther perched on a cliff base composed of several pieces of veined marble. Although unsigned, this work is in the style of Thomas François Cartier, known for his Art Deco sculptures featuring wild animals, including the panther, a symbol of strength and courage. This skillful blend of artistic metalwork--specifically "régule"--and the sculpting of naturally geometric stones like marble is typical of this period, aiming to be innovative and seeking beauty in linear, geometric forms inspired by nature.
