Description

Overlay glass perfume bottle crafted by Perthshire Paperweights, a Scottish manufacturer based in Crieff, Perthshire. The bottle features a spherical body made of thick glass, crafted using the technique known as "overlay." This technique involves covering translucent glass with a thin layer of colored glass; cutting and polishing certain areas then cut through this colored layer, revealing the colorless glass beneath. Here, the transparent amber overlay contrasts with the numerous light-colored, "slightly ovalized" circular facets distributed across the bottle's body. Inside the bottle, at the bottom, is a single blue and green floral motif. Depending on the viewing angle, this flower is reflected through several facets, creating the illusion of multiplying inside the bottle, even though it is a single
