Description

An elegant set for serving spirits or liqueurs, known as "Tantalus," consisting of an oak case adorned with Sheffield fittings and a metal key-lock closure. It includes three square-shaped decanters made of cut crystal with matching stoppers. Late 19th-century Signed Fenton Bros. The glassware is in excellent condition. This decorative piece can be used for its original purpose--serving spirits such as whiskey or port--or other liqueurs. It also makes for a refined table or bar accessory. The locking mechanism works, even though the key is purely decorative.
