Leclercq Lardin studio. Their main goal was to revive the "Vieux Roanne" style, a traditional folk-inspired earthenware whose roots date back to the 17th, 18th, and 19th centuries. [1, 2, 3, 4] After a long career crafting and painting art pieces prized by collectors and the interior design world, the two artisans retired, leading to the permanent closure of their workshop in May 2012.
