Description

A beautiful Italian High Renaissance sculpture in carved white marble depicting the face of a young man rendered in high relief. This lovely fragmentary head most certainly comes from a large high-relief group, as seems to be indicated by the two small original recesses (located on either side of the sculpture, behind the hair bands) intended to hold two wrought-iron wall-mounting brackets...The young man's face is relaxed and serene; his large, almond-shaped eyes cast a gentle yet direct gaze at the viewer. The material and style are consistent with Italian works from the early Gothic period, around the 13th and 14th centuries. The work suggests a northern Italian origin, perhaps Tuscany....In good overall condition for its age, with a few chips and signs of wear but no repairs or restorations to the
