Pocket watches with cylinder movements from the late 18th century are rare because they represented a difficult, costly, and complex transition from the traditional verge escapement of the time.Furthermore, these watches were produced by small artisan workshops and were often signed by master watchmakers. In this case, the watch is signed by Eaderley Norton, active between 1762 and 1794, one of the most respected and talented British watchmakers who worked in London at 49 St. John Street, known for crafting complex timepieces--the most famous of which is a four-dial astronomical clock made for King George III, now on display at
