Description

A Meissen porcelain chandelier with twelve light arms, arranged on two levels: eight on the bottom and four on the top. This piece is a later version produced in 1868. The original was created in the 18th century by Johann Joachim Kändler (June 15, 1706-May 18, 1775) for the Neues Palais in Potsdam. A chandelier of exceptional craftsmanship, created during the second Rococo period at the Meissen manufactory. Flowers, refined and colorful; birds; foliage; muses; and clusters of bouquets--all rendered in great detail. This chandelier is a marvel of porcelain art.
