Description

Regency-period alcove clock signed by Gosselin for Jean Philippe Gosselin, who was certified as a master clockmaker in Paris in 1717 and died in 1766. Straight cabinet in tortoiseshell veneer with a rocaille-style four-legged base, bronze leaf motifs, and a gendarme's cap. The top is crowned with an Imperial-style dome topped by a rooster. Solid gilded bronze dial with enameled cartouches featuring Roman numerals and the name of the clockmaker, Gosselin. Two putti support the dial, which features the attributes of love--a quiver and a winged torch--in the center. The movement is also signed by Gosselin. On-demand striking mechanism with three gongs (one for striking the full hours and two others for announcing the quarters). Condition: the lamp base is missing; original verge escapement but
