Description

A compact, short, stocky pocket pistol with an angular appearance that contrasts with the rounded shapes of firearms from that era. Henri-Gustave DELVIGNE, a former infantry officer in the Royal Guard (1800-1876), was the inventor and manufacturer of this weapon. Beautifully finished walnut frame; the grip is positioned at a right angle to the barrel's axis and ends in a rod within the cap--a highly original design (see photos)--held in place by a locking lug. Extended stock ending at the rear third of the barrel. Folding trigger that retracts into the stock. Octagonal barrel with internal rifling and a primer chamber featuring a large flash guard. Rear sight and ball-shaped front sight at the muzzle end of the barrel. Loading rod with a "nail head" rammer, retractable into the concealed grip
