Description

Medieval proto-stoneware pitcher from Siegburg - 13th/14th century, discovered in Cologne. A rare medieval proto-stoneware pitcher from Siegburg, of Germanic origin, dating to the late 13th or early 14th century. This wheel-thrown pitcher features a decoration of horizontal striations, a side handle, and a slightly tapered neck. The thumb-pressed base, as well as the clay body and wheel-throwing characteristics, are typical of proto-stoneware production in the Siegburg region during this period. The piece has a particularly interesting provenance: it comes from the former estate of an architect and was discovered in the 1950s in Cologne during a construction project located between 8 Caecilienstrasse and 28 Blaubach Street, in the heart of the city's historic center.
