A rare rock crystal and gilded metal (probably silver) medallion consisting of two halves set in a claw mount with a hinge and a suspension ring. The interior features three spherical notches designed to hold "crab's eyes" to ward off evil spells and protect against illness. Germany, late 17th century. Shows signs of wear; one crack in a corner, visible in the photo marked with an arrow. No other damage. The prongs are intact and the medallion closes perfectly.
