Description

An exceptional Japanese Shibayama inlaid lacquer panel dating from the Meiji period (1868-1912). The dark lacquered ground is finely decorated in gold lacquer and relief inlay with a charming scene of an elderly man and a young boy beneath overhanging pine and flowering wisteria. The child reaches upwards towards the cascading wisteria while the seated elderly man holds a tokkuri (??), a traditional Japanese sake flask. Beside him is a basket filled with clams and other seafood, suggesting a relaxed scene of sake and freshly gathered food. The figures and decorative details are executed in contrasting materials, with finely engraved and coloured inlay complemented by mother-of-pearl and gold lacquer. Particular attention has been paid to the patterned clothing, facial expressions and hands,
