Description

Andrei Zadorin (born in 1960) is a contemporary Belarusian painter whose work follows in the tradition of expressive realism. His portraits, which possess great psychological intensity, are distinguished by rich painterly texture, dark backgrounds, and Caravaggesque lighting that lends his figures a striking presence. His works are included in numerous private collections across Europe. This oil on panel, dated from the 2000s-2010s, depicts a young peasant woman in full figure, wearing a white apron and holding a basket. The dark background with warm highlights, the light that sculpts her face and clothing, and the child's serious gaze lend this work an atmosphere that is both intimate and monumental. Presented in a black shadow box with gold trim. Technique: Oil on
