Description

A walnut cabinet converted into a display case, dating from the late 19th century, from Italy. The front features a pair of glass doors that offer a glimpse of four spacious interior shelves, ideal for displaying precious objects or books. The central upright is adorned with leaf motifs, volutes, and a central rosette--a decorative motif that is also repeated on the top molding. The side posts are embellished with turned columns, lending the piece a classic elegance. The base features a pair of drawers for additional storage space, while the turned side legs and the central double-shelf leg provide stability and refinement. A distinctive piece that combines functionality and decorative art, perfect for enhancing a classic-style setting. Product condition: Due to its age and wear, this product requires restoration
