Description

Quartz, Agate, and Amethyst SphereA pair of spheres characterized by a complex interplay of colors, textures, and natural crystallizations. The surface reveals a matrix of brown-gold, gray-purple, and reddish tones, interspersed with areas of quartz and natural cavities lined with small crystals. Some areas display delicate purplish hues attributable to the presence of amethyst, while the brown and reddish shades are likely associated with iron mineralization. The spheres have been polished on the outside, allowing for a better appreciation of the depth of the various mineralizations and highlighting the color variations in the matrix. As is often the case with mineral formations of this type, each section reveals a different configuration: as you rotate the sphere, you discover new veins, crystals, and
