Description

Sculptural double bottle holder in the shape of a rhinoceros, made of brass or patinated bronze, 1970s. A striking and highly decorative sculptural double bottle holder depicting a stylized rhinoceros; a piece produced in France or Italy in the 1970s. Crafted from brass or patinated bronze, this piece combines a playful zoomorphic design with the sophisticated sculptural vocabulary characteristic of European decorative arts of the period. The rhinoceros is rendered through an intriguing combination of geometric and naturalistic forms. Its elongated, almost architectural body is defined by clean, faceted lines that contrast with the expressive modeling of the head, the distinctive horn, the curved tail, and the sculptural legs. This interplay between abstraction and organic forms gives the object a particularly strong decorative presence. The open top is designed to hold two bottles, transforming the sculpture into a functional bar accessory as well as an impressive centerpiece. Its unique shape makes it just as captivating when displayed simply as a decorative sculpture. The metal surface, richly patinated by time, features subtle variations in tone that highlight the sculptural form and lend the piece a bold character. An original example of 1970s European sculptural design, ideal for a sophisticated bar or dining room, an eclectic interior, or a collection of striking 20th-century decorative objects.
