Description

A beautiful 19th-century French farmhouse table made entirely of solid oak. It features a simple and particularly well-balanced design, with a thick rectangular top resting on four straight legs joined by a sturdy, low crossbar. Two drawers built into the apron complete the piece and serve as a reminder of this furniture's utilitarian purpose, originally designed to be part of everyday life. Over time, the oak has developed a beautiful, deep, and warm patina, revealing the wood's natural hues as well as the traces of its history. The piece possesses the straightforward and authentic character sought after in antique farmhouse tables, without any superfluous ornamentation. Its proportions are one of its main strengths. At 167 cm long and just 65 cm deep, it's a size that's particularly easy to incorporate into any space. It will naturally find its place in the kitchen or dining room of a country home, but is equally well-suited for an apartment where you wish to incorporate a beautiful antique piece without the bulk of a large traditional farmhouse table. It comfortably seats 6 people and also lends itself very well to alternative uses, such as a large work table, desk, or display table. A simple, sturdy, and timeless piece, whose beauty lies as much in the quality of its construction as in the patina acquired over generations. Dimensions: H. 75 × W. 167 × D. 65 cm.
