Description

Large decorative painting based on a work by Ivan Aivazovsky (1817-1900), based on the composition of "The Russian Fleet in the Harbor of Sevastopol " (1846), the original of which is housed at the Russian Museum in Saint Petersburg. It depicts a squadron of sailing ships anchored in the harbor, a paddlewheel steamboat, a city spreading out across the hillside, and a round tower in the foreground. On the shore, a group of figures waves to the ships, while a rowboat crosses the bay. The golden light, the reflections on the calm water, and the cloudy sky create a luminous and serene atmosphere. This is a decorative copy, not an original work by the master. It is signed "R. ALAN" in the lower right corner and set in a large gilded frame with a fluted profile, featuring a frieze of carved foliage
