Description

An elegant and uncommon pair of French mid-century bedside tables dating from the 1950s, distinguished by their complementary yet intentionally asymmetrical design. Crafted in warm-toned wood and raised on slender tapered legs, the pair embodies the understated sophistication that characterizes French postwar furniture. One cabinet features three practical drawers fitted with sculptural brass handles, while the other is designed with a single cupboard door accented by a matching brass pull. Together, they create a harmonious balance of storage options while maintaining a cohesive visual appearance. The clean lines, refined proportions, and subtle brass detailing lend the pair a timeless elegance that works beautifully in both mid-century and contemporary interiors. The warm wood grain and minimalist silhouettes reflect the restrained modernism of the period, making these bedside tables versatile pieces that can also serve as end tables or accent cabinets in a living room, guest room, or reading corner. A highly decorative and functional pair, offering both character and practical storage.
