Description

A rare polychrome majolica jug made in Siena in the 15th century, a testament to Tuscan ceramic production between the late Middle Ages and the early Renaissance. The piece features an ovoid body set on a flared foot, with a wide handle and a characteristic spout. The painted decoration is dominated by shades of blue, yellow, and orange on a light background. The central section is embellished with stylized plant motifs, geometric elements, and a painted inscription. The vibrancy of the polychrome palette and the richness of the ornamental repertoire give the jug a striking decorative presence and bear witness to the tradition of 15th-century Sienese ceramic workshops. An interesting collector's item representative of the ancient tradition of Italian majolica.
