Description: An early 20th-century oil painting on canvas depicting a winter forest landscape. The composition features, in the foreground, a capercaillie perched on a large, slanted log covered in moss, while two females move through the snow and low vegetation. The background is characterized by dense, snow-covered undergrowth and a sky illuminated by the light tones of dawn or dusk on the horizon. The painting technique employs textured, substantial brushstrokes, particularly evident in the rendering of the snow, the bark of the trees, and the birds' plumage. The work bears an illegible signature in the lower left corner and is
