Description

Contemporary cushion by Sinapango Interiors Paris, crafted in Paris from a vintage Japanese obi of exceptional quality, dating from the 1950s. The fabric comes from a Nishijin obi, a Kyoto weave renowned for the richness of its brocades. The background is entirely woven with gold thread and silk, giving the surface a dense, iridescent, almost metallic sheen, while retaining the fabric's suppleness. The design combines paulownia flowers, or kiri, with chrysanthemum-like flowers--two motifs associated with the Japanese imperial tradition. They stand out against a network of geometric waves, enlivened by accents of red, green, silver, and gold. The contrast between the gold background and the abstract motifs gives the cushion a strong yet refined decorative presence. A variation made
