Description

A very interesting religious painting on sheet metal depicting Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden, dating from the late 19th century. The composition, which is particularly decorative, combines the biblical figures with lush vegetation rendered in a rich palette of greens, reds, and golds. The dark background highlights the numerous golden and red highlights, while a symbolic depiction of Christ on the cross appears at the top of the composition. An antique work with a distinctly decorative character. This painting on sheet metal features a vertical composition, likely intended to be hung, as suggested by the metal ring preserved at the top. In the center are Adam and Eve, depicted standing on either side of the Tree of Knowledge. Their contemplative postures and hands clasped over their chests lend the scene a religious and solemn atmosphere. Vegetation plays a major role in the composition. It spreads out around the figures in the form of foliage, flowers, and plant motifs lavishly embellished with gilding, creating a particularly lush setting. In the upper section, a circular medallion features a symbolic depiction of Christ on the cross, surrounded by a prominent golden floral halo. This association of Adam and Eve with the Crucifixion can be understood as an evocation of the theological link between the Original Fall and Redemption.
