Description

???? Pair of large brutalist farmhouse benches made of solid wood - 200 cmA superb pair of large antique farmhouse benches made of solid wood, with a particularly raw and sculptural character. With their long seats carved from thick pieces of wood and their slanted legs directly joined to the seat, they possess that rustic, stripped-down aesthetic that is highly sought after today in brutalist, wabi-sabi, and country-chic interiors.???? Each bench is crafted from a long piece of solid wood, intentionally left in an irregular shape. The edges still follow the wood's natural grain, giving each bench a slightly different silhouette.???? The surfaces bear numerous traces of craftsmanship and use: tool marks, small indentations, knots, irregularities, and age-old marks remain visible. The piece has a real presence, a far cry from an industrially manufactured rustic piece of furniture. The wood features a superb honey-to-light-brown patina, with beautiful variations in tone and a particularly lively grain. The light beautifully highlights the contours and irregularities of both seats. The thick ends perfectly reveal the wood's cross-section and growth rings. Several old drying cracks are visible, particularly at the ends: they are part of the character of these solid pieces and are clearly visible in the photographs. The four legs of each bench consist of solid wood posts that flare slightly outward. This very simple construction gives the benches their rustic and graphic appearance, typical of vernacular farmhouse furniture. This pair is particularly interesting because the two benches work together without being perfectly identical: the natural variations in the wood--in width and profile--give them plenty of character while maintaining a beautiful sense of unity. At 200 cm long, they will naturally fit around a large farmhouse table or dining table. They can also be used on their own in an entryway, a large kitchen, a sunroom, or as decorative benches. Their extremely minimalist lines also allow them to blend into a more contemporary interior: paired with a minimalist table, stone, polished concrete, or metal, they immediately take on a much more brutalist and sculptural quality. Dimensions of each bench: L 200 × D 45 × H 45 cm approximately. The actual width of the seat is approximately 22 cm; the remainder of the depth corresponds primarily to the spacing between the legs. Overall in good vintage condition, with significant signs of wear consistent with their rustic character: drying cracks, holes, knots, marks, irregularities, small chips, and old marks. These features are visible in the photographs and are an integral part of their aesthetic appeal. A very beautiful pair of authentic farm benches--simple, sturdy, and decorative--whose generous proportions and wood, deeply marked by time, make them truly distinctive pieces.?
