Description

A display case containing 5 traditional Akan gold weights, originating from West Africa (Ghana or the Ivory Coast), made of bronze or brass. In excellent condition. Dated to the 18th/19th century. Baoulé weights, originating from the Akan people of Ivory Coast, are small objects made of brass or bronze traditionally used to weigh gold, serving both as measures and as cultural symbols. Each weight is meticulously crafted using the lost-wax technique, allowing for the creation of geometric, animal, or nature-inspired motifs, each conveying a specific meaning linked to the beliefs and values of the Akan people.
