Description

A pair of circular painted ceramic plates decorated with Japanese-style scenes on a black background with gold highlights. Each piece depicts a different bird--a duck and a wading bird, respectively--set against a background of cherry blossoms and wispy clouds. Both have been fitted with mounts for hanging on the wall. Monogram on the reverse. In 1786, Sébastien Keller purchased the Lunéville earthenware factory, which had been founded in 1731 by Jacques Chambrette. The factory took the name Keller and Guérin in 1832 when his son went into partnership with his brother-in-law, Guillaume Guérin. Together, they fostered its growth by developing innovative manufacturing techniques. Their production, consisting of tableware as well as decorative objects, is characterized by floral
