Description

An 18th-century glass-mounted print depicting a lively landscape. The composition features a rolling landscape centered around a lake, bordered by villages, rocky outcrops, and tall trees. In the foreground, two figures in traditional dress are conversing on a path: a woman carrying a basket stands facing a man wearing a red cap. In the background are several houses with red roofs, a small church, cypress trees, and mountains that define the perspective. This technique involves painting directly on the reverse side of a glass panel, with the artist working on the details and highlights before painting the background. The work is presented in its original frame, with its original hanging mechanism on the reverse.

Frame dimensions: 33 cm x 25.5 cm. Very good condition
