Description

A superb carved wooden sculpture by Étienne Balmadier, known as "Balma," depicting an impressive rhinoceros head. The artist makes highly original use of the wood's natural forms, roughness, and irregularities to create a particularly expressive work. The raw material and the heavily carved reliefs reinforce the animal's powerful and wild character. The sculpture features a beautiful brown patina with natural hues, along with numerous reliefs and textural effects. The composition, mounted on a base made of wood and roots, gives the piece a highly decorative and sculptural appearance.
